

Chapter One

The ship came in at first light, with no one at the wheel and no one on the deck. Mara watched it from the lamp room until the tide turned.

Her father said the sea keeps what it is given, and gives back only what it has finished with. The light-house stood where it had always stood.

Chapter Two

Nobody came for the ship. By the third day the gulls had taken it for their own.

